FRIDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 27.

of the press, and of many citizens of our State, in calling attention to the advantages of the soil, climate, mineral resources, agricultural capabilities, and commercial prospects in this State, have had their effect in attracting the notice of capitalists and immigrants—and there are now, more than at any time before, numbers of persons from the surrounding States and from abroad, who are examining and investigating the subject with a view to purchase and settlement in Virginia. We are more and more satisfied every day, that if it were not for political uncertainties, and fear of adverse legislation on the part of Congress, the tide of population and wealth would, at | least, begin to flow in upon us. But, we hope, that such a hindrance cannot last very long, and that we shall have, in the course of a year or so, such a state of things as will enable our people to look to the future with brighter prospects than they have seen for the last two years. In the establishment and security of peace, Virginia will be the first of the Southern States, to enjoy the return of prosperity. Our situation secures this. At this time there is even an emigration from the Gulf States to our valleys and mountains. There may be in some portions of the Northwest cheaper lands-but there are a hundred advantages here which are wanting in that far off country.

THE CONVENTION. -The first impulse of almost every white man is to vote against a Convention in this State, on the simple ground that Congress has no right to call a Convention in any State, and to refuse to admit or sanction such illegality by voting for a Convention socalled. But it seems to be an admitted certainty that a convention will be held; and that, therefore, opposition to its call will be useless, and many good men think very unnecessary and impolitic. The main and practical point, therefore, is to endeavor to elect the BEST and most Conservative men, who are eligible, to the Convention, and to make the fair and legal issue on the adoption or rejection of the Con stitution that may be framed by the proposed Convention. It is all important that no partizan prejudices, and no political antecedents. should be suffered to influence the feelings or warp the judgments of the voters, in their selection of candidates. Of course, Conservative voters will not vote for Radicals, of either wing of the Radical party, but they can select good, sound, CONSERVATIVE men, and vote for them, no matter whether they be elected or taking the chair he said: Gentlemen of the Convention, - On taking upon myself the discharge of the responsible. duties which your partiality has imposed upon me as President of this Convention I should entirely fail in my duty did I fail to return my most sincere thanks for the honor you have conferred upon me. And these are not idle words, but come from a heart deeply impressed with the honor which is conferred upon any man who may be called upon to preside over a Convention made up of men whose love of country has led them to abandon the comforts of home, the gains which are gathered in the fields of trade and enterprise, the honors won in the halls of justice, the pulpit, and the platform, to perillife, ease, health, and gains in the great strife in which our beloved country has for four long years been engaged-men who have marched on many a bloody field of battle, not so much in search of honor, glory, and renown as to vindicate the great principles upon which the very existence of the country de-

SPEECHES OF GEN. H. H. WELLS. Gen. H. H. Wells, of Alexandria, was elected President of the "Union ex-Officers and Soldiers Convention, at Richmond." Upon

That work, gentlemen, you did with honor to yourselves and your country, and you will ever be held in grateful remembrance by a thankful country and a richly blessed posterity; but your work is not yet done .- When the husbandman has sown the pure seed, and it is watered by genial rains and warmed by an invigorating sun, it has sprung into life, and the tender blade has ripened into the rich fruitage; his work is not done until the crowning labor ol gathering the harvest has been well done. So you have another and unfinished work; it is to gather in the fruits of the great struggle, and safely save them for the blessings of al future time. You are now to exercise the higher duty of an American citizen, and it i eminently proper that you should now aid in impressing your views, your character, and sentiment upon the politics of your State.

Hoping that you will be guided by wisdom and moderation, and do this last work as well as you did the earlier, and asking your consideration and assistance in the discharge of the responsible duties imposed upon me, I again thank you.

At the close of the Convention, a vote o thanks was passed to the presiding officer, to which Gen. Wells responded, as follows:

Gen. Wells said he had to thank the Convention-first, for electing him; second for the respect he had received; and lastly, for the vote of thanks just read. He did not come because he wanted to mingle in politics, but because he had been asked, and felt that this Convention was to meet to deliberate and act upon matters that would benefit the country. With the members of the Convention he had marched many a weary mile, bivouacked on many a field, fought many hard battles, fled from many disasters, and rejoiced in many glorious victories.

But now, after we have triumphed, the work is not quite done. The sun now shines on the tion for which we have fought will be settled No one is ignorant of what the issue was. It was to establish the supremacy of the laws and to decide whether or not the U.S. or the Coufederate States were to exist. War was the only umpire to decide that question. It was resorted to, and the U. S. by the grace of God, which favored the righteous cause for which we fought, was victorious. [Applause.] The soldiers of the Union left the field without animosity to their defeated brethren. They delight to meet them because they honor them for having the courage to fight for what they believed to be right. No one will assert, the speaker believed, that the war was not ended, that the rebels were not whipped, and that the questions at issue were not forever decided. If any one believed that they were not he did not want him in the Republican party.

We have sowed the seed; it has sprouted, ripened, and is now ready for the sickle. We are to gather the fruits, and if we hesitate a moment we will be recreant to our trust. The chains of slavery have been struck off the colored people, and there does not now exist one bondsman or bondswoman in the whole of this glorious country. [Applause ] It is now our duty to legislate for them so as to educate and secure for them all the blessings that that freedom can produce. After that is done, you have enunciated the principle that the best protection for the freedman is the blessed, Godgiven ballot-box. Teach them to exercise that blessing so that it will be beneficial, for when abused it becomes a curse.

I am rejoiced at the spirit which has characterized the action of this Convention. This is one of the corps that goes to make up the grand army that is to bring about the good results for which the grand Republican party has so long and zealously labored.

Before this struggle is ended it will be ascertained that there are but two parties in this State, in the South, or in the country. One is the party of freedom and education (the Republican party); the other is the Democratic party that for thirty years has been on every side but the honest one. Our party has to fight it out on this line; and the victory which will soon be achieved will reward for all we have done and suffered.

After again thanking his hearers for the honor done him, the speaker took his seat.

COMMUNICATED. As it has been stated that the Orange and Alexandria Railroad are about to consummate the long contemplated improvement of their wharf property (and Heaven speed them!) at the terminus of the Tunnel, on Wilkes street, (which improvement will entail some changes on Union street, viz: the taking up of the rails on that street-which are a decided nuisance, and which should have never been permitted) -allow me to suggest, respectfully, to our Corporation officials, in conjunction with the railroad men and the owners of property on that street, (Union) a simple and cheap plan, whereby the property will be enhanced in value and the facilities of discharging cargoes will be greatly enlarged. It is this: Let the street be widened at least three feet, on each side of the centre track, by curtailing that much from the sidewalks Then carts, drays and other vehicles, will have ample room-even if the centre track remains-to wheel about. As it is now, all know the miserable condition of the street. If, as we are told, the Recording Angel takes note of the oaths that are shouted out loud enough to hear, even if he were deaf, how large a book will be filled with the imprecations of irate draymen and eartmen when they find themselves "stalled" against a crosstie or rail, or an axle-tree smashed to "smitherines" Let them be relieved. The writer of the lumber, coal, wood, or plaster trade. Enthis is the owner of some property on Union quire of street, in a good location, and would be willing to have his property specially taxed to meet the expenses of this much-needed public im provement. He is actuated by no other desire than an earnest wish for the prosperty of the good old town, and hopes that whatever charge may be made on the street will be an improvement. Look to it, gentlemen, all. Let us, when we commence this work, do it rightfor all time. The expense will be slight, the street vastly improved, and merchants and others greatly accommodated. The beneficial results must be apparent to all—it is patent. It is hoped that the O. & A. R. R. will do the lion's share of this work, for obvious reasons. In any event, let the Corporation, through the worthy Superintendent of Police, see that the work is substantially done, or not all. R.
